Barale

The Barale family has been making wine in Piemonte since 1870. One of the oldest and most rigorously traditional estates in the area, Barale is one of the few producers who still use large oak casks for fermentation instead of stainless steel. The wines are then matured exclusively in large, old barrels to minimize the apparent flavor of the oak. Barale produces classic, austere nebbiolo that requires many years of ageing to reach full maturity.

Castello di Verduno

Virtually unknown outside of Italy, Castello di Verduno produces a variety of Piedmontese wines in a classic style. The Nebbiolo is sourced from the village of Verduno. Known for its sandy soils and generous sun exposure, the wines of Verduno are ripe and accessible with less tannic structure.

Produttori del Barbaresco

Founded in 1958, this landmark co-operative has a sterling reputation for long-aging wines and exceptional value. The co-operative sources exclusively Nebbiolo grapes from an association of about 80 growers within the Barbaresco zone. Many of these grower families have worked the same land with the same fruit for generations. Aldo Vacca, the Director of the co-operative, has been a great friend to Oliveto for many years and played an essential role in the creation and development of the Wine In Time project.

Giuseppe Rinaldi

A legend among piedmontese producers, Giuseppe Rinaldi has been producing Barolo wine for over a century. As traditional as it gets, "Beppe" Rinaldi still ferments all of his Baroli in the massive, 110 year old piedmontese oak vat that his great grandfather used. The wines are aged in large old oak for two years before bottling. Rinaldi still holds to the tradition of blending fruit from different vineyards to create a perfectly balanced, long aging wine.

Badia a Coltibuono

Home to one of the greatest cellars of old Chianti in all of Tuscany. The winemaking focus at Badia a Coltibuono reflects a dedication to long-lived wines and traditional methods. Roberto Stucchi, the winemaker of the estate until 2001, is an old friend of Oliveto and has been an invaluable participant in the creation and development of the Wine In Time project.

Felsina

Felsina is one of the great estates in Tuscany, and one of the most famous properties in all of Italy. As compared to some other top estates in the region, Felsina relies exclusively upon Sangiovese for its Chianti Classicos as well as its IGT "Fontalloro." Each Felsina wine exhibits a deft combination of power and elegance. While some new oak is used on the wines, it is used in a measured way as to not dominate the texture and aromas of the wines.

Fontodi

The Fontodi estate, located in Panzano, has a long history; vines have been cultivated here since the time of the Roman empire, and documents prove there was vinification here as far back as the 16th Century, at a farmhouse then referred to as Case Via. The Fontodi wines skillfully straddle the line between traditional and modern styles and do so with a distinctive character all their own. The use of new oak, especially on the top crus, is more pronounced than some of our other favorite producers, but the quality and intensity of fruit produced by this exceptional estate admirably absorbs and integrates it.

Sella

The Sella wine estates are one of the oldest active Italian wine producers. The Sella family has produced wine in Lessona from their own vineyards since the mid 17th century, and has owned and cultivated vineyards in Bramaterra (at Villa del Bosco) for the same amount of time; the two estates were combined in 1881. Sella vinifies in a classical style. "Classical" doesn't mean "old". Although the technique of vinification and the technology used in the cellar are continually updated, authentic characteristics of the terroir and the vines are what is prized most and expressed by gentle extraction and aging in neutral wood. Today the estate still maintains its original artisanal scale, and is still devoted to a limited production of high-quality wine.
